assurance with which Ser tary (all le figur sout a simples research of $22 old 123 for the year ending D of 11, Prope would occuse in amusement or the gen eral studies with of a kind to justify The value of this is unit must be measured by comparing it with been tary Carlish 4 other other ligurages. It his report to Congressia December, 1891 beestimated bedeauting in the rev enges of the Lovernme t for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, at 528,000,000 Orly altthemat thin a month later January 13 1891 he adores ed a letter to Charman - somess of the Sona e Com mittee on F names in which he stored that if the sine aver go monthly defi current that had previous up to that between recepts and expenditures lun-10, 1804, would be $74 167 532. Here !a discrepancy in estimates, amounting to over fifty million dollars, the estimate being only a month apart. In December, it suited Mr. Carbele a purpose to make things as rosy as possible, and se he promulgated the absurd estimate con tained in his annual report. In January, the desperate condition of the Ireasury could no longer be concealed, and he found it necessary to plead for a bond leaur, so he calculy added flits million dollars to the previous estimate

I sat Dicember the Secretary estimat ed the deficiency for the year ending June 30 1897, at $20 000,000. For the seven months of that period that have elapsed the deflerency amounts to $34, 137 141 To justify his estimate for the current year, herefore, it is necessary that the next five months should result in a surplus of $14,000,000

Nor is this all It by latest estimate of $22,000,000 audplus revenue, in round numbers, for the present calendar year is to be austained by facts, it will be necessary that the surplus for the latter balf of the year shall be sufficient to overcome the deficit of the first half, and leave the figures which Mr Carlisto names as a margin. In other words,

000,000 for the latter half of the year. Bearing in sulnd that the Treasury ran behind more than 85 000,000 in December, and more than $6,000,000 in January, the absordity of estimating that the operations of the next five months will show a surplus of $14,000.000 and those of the ensuing six | months a surplus of 842,000 000 is sufficiently apparent. It is true that the revenue will be increased during this period by the income tax. Secretary's estimate. Such as it is, however, the e-timate | precludes any app-al from he Administration for ald to mee deficiencles in revenue.

[CONTINUED.] CHAPTER XIIL The tall clock in the corner of the hall, in five slow, clanging strokes, was ringing a knell for another dead hour as Edith Ellery, dressed for a drive, come gingerly tripping down that great onk staironse whose exquisite polish was of a sort to almost audibly cry a warn girl have looked more lovely than now, as she settled herself in a corner of the high backed sent in the shadow of the stairway, her cheeks flushed as though they burned to rival the smiling, red hipped mouth, her brown eyes shining with a sort of sentillant glow, like bits of polished geld stone. It was in nat ural reaction from the gloom which had lately so heavily oppressed her that now, for the moment, she was almost riolously happy. She had forgotten to reproach herself for her weak and vacil lating attitude toward Marshall Wood bury She did not care to think what the luture might hold in stere. She only exulted in the thought that within the She did not care to think what hour when once her fateful message was fishing over the wires, she could feel that she had finally severed the list knot of that feelish tangle into which she had blandered file could have shouted for gladness in the mid sense of freedom that was here once more of freedom that was hore once more.

She idly picked up a newspaper, but she was too excited to read. The striking of the clock had suggested a new idea, rominding her of the difference in time between Louiser and Boston. Marshall Woodbury by this time must have left his office for the day, and her message, if directed there could not reach him before the next morning. In her impartance to have the matter at the nevertal question is her delical if it would peoping over the blust de as she had not be better to have it follow him to his horse and yet heat tang with a not be better to have it follow him to his house and yet, hearting, with a whimse il sufficient second that she ins house and 16th, next tring, with a whimse of simbo—it seemed that she could selectly take my questions rousely just now—she reminded herself that he might perhaps prefor not to have inspect of might be along prefor not to have inspected and the words.
